INDIANS.—On Monday last Geo. Creighton and some one else whose name we did not learn, were out hunting stock in Sandrichson's Prairie, about eight miles from Arcata, when they came upon an ox which had just been killed by Indians. The diggers had been warned of their approach and fled. By the number of tracks, the whites did not deem it prudent to pursue them, and turned back. As there is considerable snow in the mountains now it would be a good time to hunt Indians in that vicinity.
