THE INDIANS.—In another column will be found a letter from a correspondent at Sacramento City, detailing the particulars of the "Indian fight" which recently took place in that region. We regret to hear that such events have transpired, and we are sorry to believe that the difficulties have grown out of the rashness of the whites rather than the culpability of the Indians. From our own observation whilst in the mines, we do not believe the Indians desirous to take life, although we have no doubt they will always be found ready to steal. They are a puny, cowardly, and perhaps treacherous, race, and only require to be closely watched. Nevertheless we have often witnessed on the part of many white men a disposition to wantonly maltreat and abuse the Indians whenever it was in their power. This has become so much a matter of fact with some, that they regard an Indian's life as little better than the life of a dog. Such feelings and such conduct are manifestly wrong, as they are most assuredly injudicious; and it will probably be found that in nine cases out of ten it is to the wantonness of the whites more than to the criminality of the Indians that difficulties and outbreaks are owing.
