

TWO INDIANS KILLED.—On Saturday last, two men, Wesley Sumption and Hitchcock, were out looking after stock on the Inqua Ranch, when they heard the report of an Indian gun, down in a gulch. It being foggy, the whites succeeded in surprising the Indians, coming on them soon after they had killed one of Titlow & Prince's work oxen, and were engaged in cutting it up. There were four Indians in the lot, one of whom had been posted some distance off from the balance as a look out. Sumption shot and killed him on the spot, and while Hitchcock broke to get the Indian's gun, Wesley gave chase to the balance. The dogs singled out one and chased him for near a mile before Sumption came upon him. He overtook him, however, and finished him, by shooting him four times with his pistol. The gun taken from the first Indian was recognized as the one formerly belonging to Henry Lemcke, murdered by Indians two years ago. The other two Indians escaped in the red-woods.
