

INDIANS KILLED.—We are informed by Mr. Joseph Sumption, that three men, Hitchcock, Buckley, Brown, came across three Indians, one day last week, on the north fork of Yager Creek, and made an attack upon them. The Indians showed fight but were at last killed. In the fight Mr. Hitchcock was wounded in the hand. One of the Indians had a fine double barrelled, English gun—one barrel rifled, the other for shot, made by Riley, High St. Holborn, London. The owner can obtain it upon application to either of the parties above named, upon proving property. Mr. Sumption was in town on Monday, to get supplies for a party of 15 or 20 men, who design spending a couple of weeks in an attempt to put a stop to the continued depredations upon the stock of the settlers.—Northern Californian.

 Of all the amusements of the mind,
 From logic down to fashions, There isn't one that you can find So very cheap as "wishing!"
 A very choice diversion, too, It's not as we are apt to do, Persevering and to lose it.

WISHING!
 I wish—a common wish, indeed—My purse was something father, That I might cheer the child of need,
 And not my pride to foster;
 That I might make oppression feel,
 As any gold can make it.
 And weak Uncle Sam's rod of steel,
 As only gold can break it.
 I wish—that sympathy and love,
 And every human passion
 That has its origin above, Would come and keep in fashion;
 That Science, reason, and fire,
 And every base emotion,
 Were banded fifty fathoms deep Beneath the waves of ocean!
 I wish the Greeks were always true,
 And mothers always pure;
 I wish the good were not so few,
 I wish the bad were fewer;
 I wish that paucous ne'er forgot To heed their pious teaching!

recognizable as a white. He was soon known as the Indian captive. He spoke English purely well though bis accent was so to be understood. And this was his story: He had been stolen, there could be little doubt.
 Of the first few years of his captivity he had not evidence beyond what the Indians told him. He understood that he had not been made captive by the Potawatamies, who took him to Canada. They sold him for five gallons of whiskey to the Fair-pairs; and these men, the Whites, go for miles gal lons of the same coveted liquor. With the Whites, goes he remained some time. From them he was transferred to the Chippewas, who sold him to the Sioux. His more dis tinct recollections commences about twenty six years ago. In April, twenty-five years ago, he was sold in Iowa to the British, and Covert, near the mouth of the Red River, and California. Finally he became one of a band which was part of a collection from several tribes who had gone to the Northwest. There he said frequent visits to the Russian forts on Colville river. About eight years ago, being then near one of the Hudson Bay settlements, some of the em ploees of that company requested that he might be given up as a "pale-face," which, it would seem was the first information that he had of that fact; and led him subsequent ly to make inquiries which acquainted him with his history. The request was refused; and for three years after, the tribe was kept clear of the settlement. During this time the chief, perhaps to attach him firmly, gave him a daughter in marriage. This marriage produced a girl and boy. This tribe had receives his eldest son, bearing with him, it might be a total stranger, it might be the same, but the fondly-remembered darling boy William enters the room with his precious charge. The mother, a hale old man, manly pluck, and by which he will draw a fair share of his life, his rising emotions, with trem ling hands seeks to find the scars which he recalls so well. There they are! Instant ly overpowered by the surging tide of feeling that sobbing can now keep down, he falls upon the lost one's neck, exclaiming in that language so familiar to the reader of the "Word and Son," "My son, my son, this is my son!" Floods of tears came to his eyes he. The brothers and sisters who had the lost and found limb of the flock, sobbing out their hearts' affection, and his own grazed on the brother who was blood of their blood, and on whom had laid the dispensa tion of a fate, the sad story of which was enough to move a stranger to tears. Of all them, none could feel like William Brayton.

 For had he not been unwelcome to some ex tent for the dreadful calamity which had so long consigned a brother to a living death, There was one who we feel ought to have been there—the fond and mourning mother!
 But long since her heart had ceased to beat, —its ebbing pulses tremulous with the emo tions of sorrow and grief for her long lost boy.
