

THE VOLUNTEERS.—We learn from our young friend Ed Turk, who came in on furlough to attend the Washington Ball, that the Hoopa Indians had met some of the Redwoods, and that the latter were willing to make and receive propositions for a surrender. The Indians named the Big Lagoon above Trinidad, as a place of rendezvous and Gen. Kibbe, accompanied by Capt. Messic and twenty-five of his men, have gone there to see what arrangements can be made.

The Gen. as well as all the men engaged in the campaign are anxious for the expedition to terminate, but too much has already been sacrificed, and so great a stimulant would be given the Indians to continue their atrocities if any terms short of an unconditional surrender, and removal to the Reservation should be accepted by Gen. Kibbe now.

— We have our doubts about the Indians accepting any terms that will be satisfactory to Gen. Kibbe, or do justice to the citizens. We do not believe that the hostile braves of the Redwood-tribe—those few who have committed all the murders and depredations—will show their grim visages in the Lagoon Council. We think so from the fact that they know, and fully appreciate the advantages they possess over white men, including pursuit and subsisting any where in the mountains. We think so because we know they have received valuable acquisitions to their secret knowledge of the war-path by their former associations with our race, under the garb of friendship, thereby acquainting themselves fully with our habits of life and modes of warfare, and when we consider that their resistance is countenanced by renegade white men—as is undoubtedly the case—that they are confirmed in the belief that the sympathy of a portion of our people is in their favor, why wonder that they will refuse to yield?

resistance is countenanced by renegade white men—as is undoubtedly the case—that they are confirmed in the belief that the sympathy of a portion of our people is in their favor. Why wonder that they will refuse to yield? A great majority of these Indians are indolent and cowardly, and many of them old and decrepit. These, no doubt, would gladly accept any offering which would guarantee support, and relieve them of the fearful responsibility of keeping without the reach of the volunteers' rifles. But to take them, and leave the others at large, would be to offer a renewed incentive to hostilities, and open a more extended field for their depredations. Gen. Kibbe has learned fully how these matters stand. He knows that to enter into any treaty without getting their guns, would be worse than none at all, and only render it necessary to call more troops into the field at an early day.
