

TROOPS AT YAGER.—Lieut. Lynn with a detachment of troops, for some time past on South Eel river, has been ordered to Yager Creek to punish the Indians in that vicinity, for the outrages recently committed by them at Larrabee's. We hope the Lieut., with his detachment of thirty men, may be successful in chastising the murderers.

THE HUMBOLDT TIMES.

EUREKA, HUMBOLDT COUNTY, CALIFORNIA, SATURDAY, MARCH 9, 1861.

Washington's Farewell Address.
 In these troublous times it is highly appropriate to refer to, and ponder well upon, the Farewell Address, which George Washington, in his Farewell Address, in his memorable document bears date "United States, 17th of September, 1796," and is addressed "to the People of the United States." It was towards the close of his second term of office and just prior to the third election for President, and the primary object of the address was to apprise his fellow-citizens of the resolution he had formed "to decline being considered among the number of those out of whom a choice was to be made."—Omitting the introductory part, we extract from the Address the portions that treat of domestic dangers and how they should be avoided; and as we read, we are almost led to believe that the part of this great and good man was guided by the power of inspiration:

By looking forward to the moment which is intended to terminate the career of public life, my feelings do not permit me to suppress the deep acknowledgments to my beloved country for the many honors it has conferred upon me; still more for the steadfast confidence with which it has supported me; and for the opportunities I have thence enjoyed of manifesting my inviolable attachment to services faithful and persevering, though in usefulness unequal to my zeal. If benefits have resulted to my country from these services, let it always be remembered to your pride, and as an incentive to your emulation, that, under circumstances in which the prospect, agitated in every direction, seemed to be unclouded amidst unexampled

OUR UPON A TIME.
 Ten or twelve years ago I found
 A score of letters already bound
 Some were from the friends of mine
 Some were from the friends of mine
 And my heart fell sad and humbled;
 For I knew the thoughts, the hopes,
 The wishes, the brilliant tropes
 These letters meant to give
 Were symbolized by the ink and seal.
 I opened one—my pulse gave quicker
 My spirit fell, my breath came shorter;
 I traced in lines, close, firm and clear,
 Telling how deeply, fondly dear,
 The being was for whom I loved sake
 That letter came, with such a note,
 I cannot report it, I do not know
 It told of Miss's increase of wealth
 Of five young rabbits, all milk-white,
 That Gyp and Dobbin was "all right,"
 That Mifflin would quickly come,
 And then for holidays and house,
 I gave a pair, half eek, half pig,
 With poultry, food, and every thing,
 And folded from my misty gaze
 My mother and my school-girl days.
 I looked upon another leaf,
 Bold, free, and dashing in its form;
 And there I saw the teachers' strand,
 And various passions of the stern
 That bore the right and from its hold,
 And long it nurtured, still and calm,
 Upon the rocks, so sure to send
 Its billows full of life and joy,
 And cheer his childhood's playmate friend
 With letters from the sailor boy.
 Another and another scroll
 I opened—some by one I read;
 I gazed as they were as my heart
 I strived to look upon the dead,
 Lovers, with its ardent vows, was there,
 Friendship, that promised to be true,
 Words that like summer light and air
 Flit by my heart's world with a flash and die.
