The Expedition to Pitt River Valley.

A company organized at Yreka for the purpose of going into Pitt River Valley to ascertain, if possible, the fate of Messrs. Rogers, Johnston and others, who are reported to have been murdered by the Hat Creek Indians, have not been successful in their undertaking. The company passed the dividing ridge between Shasta and Pitt River Valleys, but their horses and mules had not sufficient strength to break the snow, the remaining distance; they returned to Yreka.

The Chronicle understands that the company intends in the course of a week or two, or as soon as they can have a probability of getting through, to make another effort.
