

Judicious.—Col. Lippitt has given orders that a small force from Fort Anderson be stationed at Liscom's Hill, to protect that neighborhood from Indian depredations; as also to furnish escorts to mails, trains and parties of travelers.— This is a good point from which to operate against the savages by a company or two, but until Gen. Wright shall send more troops to this district, eleven men is all that the Col. can detail for that service.

The Soldier's Little Daughter.

BY MRS. M. A. DENISON.

The night was stormy, dark and cold,
My way led through the city,
Where wretched buildings, gray and old,
Seemed stained with tears of pity.

20th. After another severe night, our men were about to prepare a little food, when the rebels opened upon them a fire of musketry, that was well calculated to create the wildest confusion, if not a panic, but the line of battle was at once formed, and the storm of leaden hail returned, day before the surrender of Fort Donelson, are extremely interesting. The sortie preceding the storming of the enemy's battery was received by our troops in the following order: 18th Illinois on the extreme right, and the 8th Illinois next, 30th next, then the 29th supporting posed to such raking fire subjected them to, to ground against the over which the rebels continued against them.
