From the Indian Commission.

We are in the receipt of intelligence from Camp McLean on the Fresno river, as late as the 10th inst.

There is but little news in that quarter. In addition to the party of Indians who came into camp on the 30th ult., about thirty were subsequently brought in by Capt. Kirkindale of the volunteers. After being fed and comfortably clothed to the extent of the Commissioners' ability, they departed, but for what reason does not appear. Whether they will return with their brethren or not is decidedly problematical, although a meeting was appointed for them and their fellows on King's run. These Indians were from the neighborhood of the San Joaquin.

The tribes in that vicinity and the Fresno do not evince any disposition to treat and the probability was that in a day or two an expedition of Regulars and Volunteers would be despatched to the mountains to stir them up. They are said to number a thousand warriors and to be held in great fear by the other tribes disposed to treat. To their influence, therefore, and their reiterated threats of summary vengeance upon all who treat with the whites, may be attributed the very slight progress made by the Commissioners.

A large train of supplies arrived in camp from Stockton on the night of the 10th.
