

NEIL'S RANCH, VAN DUZEN CREEK. }
April 15th, 1861. }

Captain—Private Casey of your company was badly wounded this morning, in an engagement with the Indians, near Mad River, about two hundred miles from here. He was shot with an arrow, about two inches below the right shoulder blade, and near the back bone. I pulled the arrow out, but the stone head was so deeply embedded that it broke short off, and of course yet remains in him. He was carried from the ranch, where the fight took place, to where he now is ~~on~~ a litter; complains of suffering much pain, and is really so bad that I could not move him here. Will you please send medical attendance for him?

I had a fight with the Indians yesterday not far from where I again attacked them this month, and killed between fifteen and twenty; today five were killed and three wounded. The Indians are very troublesome and almost continually killing cattle.

Respectfully

The Two Aprils.

Young April treads light in the woodland,
And smiles through her tears in the lane,
And the sun of the old, old spring-tide
Falls warm on the cheek again.

The breath of the old, dead breezes
That blow in the face of the boy,
Creeps back from my life's faded meadows
With whiskers of hope and of joy.

The lark that I heard in my childhood, day of dissolution—standing up with unabated strength and with the flag of our Union in his hand—standing upon him conquered fields like the last soldier of a brave and gallant band—and then—when the Union is no more, and she stands then the image of patriotism, honor, heroism and fidelity to the Union to her last gasp—not till then, I would have her consider what man can be found for herself. Between Caloosa Swamp and I in the Cherokee nation, we saw a black crow perched on a limb, most of them seated and smoking, stopped to see what was the news Sunday, and there had been news for a gallon of whisky. They inquired on all the gait, and the
