

KIDNAPPING INDIANS.—Col. Henley has been endeavoring for some time past to discover the persons engaged in the notorious trade of stealing Indians. This infamous practice has been extensively carried on, the object being to sell them to those of the whites whose conscience would permit them to purchase. Col. Henley has succeeded in obtaining the arrest and indictment of several persons. We learn that one of the kidnapers has been convicted and sent to the State Prison. There was an attempt made a short time since by some Mexicans to steal thirteen children from one of the Reservations, but the scoundrels were overtaken and some of them captured. The children were tied together by the wrists and when rescued the rope had cut them severely. A large number of the children have been brought down and sold in the agricultural market. They bring from fifty to one hundred dollars each. Each goat duct has the same effect. Indians very shy of coming into the market, as they think that it is a trick to separate them of their children.—

front of the stage, and made a great deal of noise and a great deal of noise generally. The life of the transition of the highway was full of these young gentlemen, in their shirt sleeves, with boots too big and caps perched on the point of the head. (The New York Times says that the use of the common jails for the purpose of confining persons arrested as fugitives under the fugitive slave law, and laid on the table eyes 46, pages 33.)
The New York Times contains a letter from Knox, not at all complimentary to this country and its people. He says, "I am glad to see that you are ruled by loggins under Mr. Fillmore's administration, and that things are not a whit better under that of President Pierce. It is a singularly considerable change, because he failed to take his office."
A model return upon a writ was recently made by a deputy sheriff in Oregon county, Indiana. It was a very good one, and was in the following words by the woman, so that I could drive it into a man's nose.
LATER FROM MEXICO. By the arrival of the clipper schooner Hudson from Mazatlan, which vessel arrived on the 1st inst., we learn that the country is in a state of rebellion, and that the rebels are in possession of the capital and are committing various crimes. It is impossible for any person to pass through without being molested. Santiago had been sacked by a band of robbers, and report was that some of the inhabitants had been murdered. The rebels proceeded up the coast of the Gulf of California to a village, and committed the same depredations as at Mazatlan. A party of the rebels followed them to a distance of some miles, and a fight ensued, which resulted in the defeat of the rebels. The rebels were driven back to their strongholds, and the government forces were enabled to resume possession of the country.
The city of Mazatlan, the interior of the State, and the coast are now in the hands of the rebels. Mr. Johnson, who is a passenger on the clipper, has just returned from the city of Mazatlan, and reports that the rebels are very numerous, and are committing various crimes. He also reports that the government forces are doing their best to suppress the rebellion, but are having little success.
