

INDIANS.— Slaughtering stock is still continued by the savages. In the early part of the week they shot several head of cattle on England's Prairie, among which were four valuable work oxen, the property of Mr. Jarnigan. It is not known how many cattle the Indians have killed in that locality in the past ten days, but more or less every day.

Orpheus C. Kerr waxes humorous on the mystery of Fremont's removal from Missouri to Western Virginia, and indulges in some pertinent remarks on the

"Yes!" says Captain William Brown, with a fascinating and elaborate wink, at the decenter, "the physical man having taken Manassas, the human intellect is now in airy play." "Ali!" says William, majestically passing me the disentangled curl-paper on which he had been writing, "read what I have penned for the nation."
