

MORE ABOUT THE INDIAN FIGHT.—We are informed by W. W. Green, who resides on Big Stony Creek, and who participated in the late fight with the Indians, who killed Watson and committed the depredations were a roving band of Pitt River Indians, under the lead of the notorious Hat Creek Lize, well known in the Pitt River country as a desperate Indian woman of large stature, and celebrated for various barbarities. This squaw and two others were killed in the desperate fight in which Ford and Shannon fell. Green says that as the attack began at dawn of day, and the squaws were fighting by the side of the male Indians, the killing of the former was unavoidable, but not intended.—[Colusa Sun.

Ramors from Southern California and Arizona.
The Los Angeles News of April 30th, says:

Ramors have been current in town during the week to the effect that a portion of Col. Carleton's advance guard had been cut off and captured by the rebels in Arizona. Some accounts have it that two companies have been taken prisoners. It is further stated that there is a force of 1,500 rebels at Tucson, ready to dispute the passage of Col. Carleton's command. There may or may not be any truth in these rumors, but we incline to the belief that a force has been concentrating in Arizona for a long time past, and that it has been constantly augmented by the arrival of reinforcements from California. We believe that the only motive which governs this band is plunder. Could they succeed in forcing their way into this section of the State, the sympathizer with treason would suffer alike with the Union man. No distinction is made by such guerilla bands as the one now supposed to be rendezvousing in Arizona. The actions practiced by the Texas forces in New Mexico upon all classes, is indicative of what they would do here. But we apprehend that the danger of their presence here is far distant. Even supposing the rumor true, which we do not believe, the cutting off of the two companies, the main body of the troops are not far distant, and, we feel assured, will give a good account of themselves, should they meet a body of these outlaws.

We learn that a gentleman arrived here from Fort Yuma yesterday, who says there was no truth in the rumor of the cutting off of two companies of Colonel Carleton's command. The same paper of May 2d remarks: A rumor was rife in town on Wednesday that a detachment of troops, numbering 12 men, who had been detached from Fort Yuma, had been surprised and fired upon by a party of 30, killing the captain commanding the troops, one soldier, and wounding three or four others. The firing upon the soldiers was from an ambuscade; the soldiers charged upon the attacking party, capturing three Arizona rebels. The commanding officer. The above report was put in circulation here on the statement of a man who, it is said, arrived here direct from the Colorado. Several citizens, we are informed heard his statement. We put the above down as a probable rumor, which was current in that vicinity at the time the parties left. True or untrue, as the case may be, it is just what may be expected if soldiers are found in Arizona in small squads.
