

THE INDIANS IN ROUND VALLEY GETTING TROUBLE-SOME.—The Mendocino Herald of 13th May remarks:

Mr. Jose has just returned from Round Valley, and informs us that the Indians inhabiting regions north of Round Valley have of late become bold and threatening in their conduct. On Thursday night of last week a party of them came into the valley and surrounded the Indian Rancharia on John Owens's farm. They fired into the Rancharia a number of times, killing one squaw, and severely wounding two or three others. It is also said that in a talk with one of the same Indians they expressed their determination to burn everything in the valley, so soon as the dry season has rendered the grass and grain sufficiently combustible to enable them to do so.

We have had sufficient evidence long ago to convince us that a most unpleasant state of things exists in the region of which Round Valley is the centre of operations. The location of the Reservation there, and the industrious and thrifty inhabitants of that valley, only serve to invite the attacks and depredations of the treacherous and warlike Wyalackies. Plunder, and the means of subsistence off of other people's labor, are their principal objects. Whenever their food, as furnished by nature, becomes scarce, they have only to make a descent upon the Reservation and inhabitants of Round Valley, to enrich themselves with abundance of plunder to keep them alive in their primitive way of living. This necessarily causes resistance on the part of the settlers and Indians of the valley, who do not feel disposed to give up the fruits of their labor without at least an effort to protect them. The consequence is that open hostilities have continued to exist for the last two years, the Indians improving every opportunity they can to annoy and injure the whites and Indians in the valley, while those in the valley seldom lose an opportunity to retaliate upon them with lead and steel.

"The Indians in Round Valley Getting Troublesome." San Francisco Bulletin,
May 19, 1864, p. 1, col. 3.

San Francisco Bulletin

FRANCISCO THURSDAY EVENING, MAY 19, 1864.

The Rebel Carnival of Blood.

able to identify it. I have also taken full notes

Rebel Review of the Situation.