

HORRID CRUELTY.—Four men, who have been hunting for some time past, in the mountains, about twenty-five miles northeast of this, met with a serious loss last week. They were camped on Battle Creek, about ten or twelve miles beyond Cold Spring Valley, and, in the night, the Indians made a descent upon their horses, which were picketed out some distance from their camp, and killed three out of the four, by cutting their throats and stabbing them back of the shoulder. We hope to hear of the settlers in that section taking the matter in hand, and without any fuss or excitement, coolly wipe these blood-thirsty savages out of existence.

BEACON.
