

LET 'EM FIGHT.—On Thursday of last week the diggers in Hoopa, "spillin for a fight," marched out in an open field, and had a battle among themselves. The row commenced about a difficulty of old standing, between two ranches—the Ser-nal-te and Ty-clamen-te—the latter ranch being joined in the fight by some warriors from Men-til-te and Ties-tang, while the Ser-nal-tes were assisted by the Un-saw-tes, Mes-kuts and some from Klamath. These ranches are all located on the bank of Trinity, within a distance of ten miles, some of them being within a half mile of each other. The two ranches at war are not more than half a mile apart. They all speak the same language, and as they are pretty well armed and nearly equally divided there is a prospect that several will be killed before a treaty of peace is established, unless some "kind intervention" should intervene.

In the recent fight twelve Indians were wounded, two of whom have since died, and it was hoped that two more would die. They are getting ready for another big fight, and all they ask of the whites is to be "let alone."
