

The Indian Campaign.

The present campaign against the hostile Indians in this county has been conducted with ability, and up to this time has been most successful. Since the detachments reached their several fields of operation but few acts of hostility have been perpetrated by the treacherous savages, who for years past have devoured the substance of the pioneer settlers, laid waste their fields, robbed and burned their dwellings, driven off and slaughtered their herds. The Indians have not been able to attend to these pastimes since the troops have actively taken the field against them, for their old game of endeavoring to keep out of the way until the danger was passed, has left them but little leisure for predatory excursions. Formerly, upon the occurrence of a startling outrage small detachments have been sent out to chastise the perpetrators if caught in the act; but as the Indians were cunning enough to cease their hostilities upon the approach of the troops and keep themselves secreted, the detachments, after a cursory examination of the country and meeting with no enemy disposed to give them battle, were marched back to head quarters, leaving the Indians unharmed and at liberty to renew their depredations.

This campaign has been conducted upon no such principles. A military force has been sent into the heart of the Indian territory to remain a sufficient length of time to ascertain if hostile Indians were there, and if so, to bring them to justice, thereby affording some protection to the people of the county in reality, as well as on paper. Orders to this effect were given at the commencement of the campaign, and vigorously have they been executed. The people realize that they are protect-on ~~at the commencement~~ of the campaign, and vigorously have they been executed.

The people realize that they are protected in their lives and property—all agreeing that the war is being prosecuted with energy and discretion. A large majority in this county have always revolted at the thought of an indiscriminate massacre of the natives, and would oppose with all their power and influence any proposition of that nature; but we firmly believe that we truly represent the feelings of ninety-nine one-hundredths of our population, in saying that the present campaign will eventuate in great benefit to every material interest in this section of the State. At the same time the loss of life to Indians themselves will be less ~~from a war like this which will conquer~~ a peace—than by a continuous and irresponsible border warfare with the settlers.

Some share of the credit for the success of the campaign is undoubtedly due the volunteer guides, who were mustered into service upon the requisition of the Gen'l commanding this division of the army. They are men accustomed to a mountain life, familiar with this portion of the country, and acquainted with the Indian character. Two months of the three for which they volunteered has expired, but the war is not brought to a close, nor is it probable that it can be within the next four weeks. Some roving bands yet require a lesson before they will forego their love of plunder. Whether a volunteer force will be mustered into service at the expiration of the present term, depends upon the reports forwarded to Gen.
Sumner from Fort Humboldt. We sincerely hope the campaign will not be brought to a termination until a military post is established in the interior, and unmistakable indications apparent that there will be a prolonged season of security from Indian outrages.
