

We are told, by a gentleman who recently passed through the Bald Hill country, near the head of Yager Creek, that the feed in that section, consisting of clover and mountain grasses, for miles and miles, is up to the sides of a mule. This is a portion of the country which the settlers have been obliged to abandon, in consequence of the continued slaughter of their stock by the Indians. But if any suppose that such a country will remain unoccupied because a few miserable diggers infest it, they are very much mistaken. It is an outrage, however, that, for want of some action by the Federal troops or State authorities, the first few settlers have been compelled to leave it, even temporarily.

Nature Opposed to Monopoly.
Evidently Nature intends that those who till the soil should own it. It is not her design that the few should own and the many toil upon it. Nature is conservative. She has regular and well established laws that
