

Lieutenant Collins' Command.

Since Lieut. Collins has taken the field he has been remarkably successful; at every Indian ranch he has attacked, all the warriors have been killed, wounded, or driven from the field. In all one hundred and seventeen and a number wounded.

The most stringent orders have been enforced that none but hostile Indians should be attacked, and we have it from good authority that no Indians but those guilty of outrages upon the whites have been molested.

The troops have followed the Indians night and day, packing their provisions and blankets on their backs. Lassic's band—the most formidable in the mountains—have been driven from their strongholds, and four of their number killed. They have been taught that they can be found and punished. Three men of this command have been wounded, fortunately none mortally. The Indians will fight when surrounded, which is the plan always adopted by the troops.

Since last advices the following items have been received:

In the engagement on 30th ult.—noticed last week—John Stuart was wounded in the hand by an arrow.

On the 10th inst. was found where fifteen horses and two mules had been killed. These animals were the property of H. P. Larrabee; they were stolen from his ranch near Van Duzen creek in April last.

The 16th, Lassic's band was attacked and completely routed—four of their number killed. Corporal Larrabee, of the volunteers, seriously wounded in the arm with an arrow.

On the 17th inst. a ranch was attacked near Kettinshou, which resulted in the death of six warriors. Several hundred pounds of fresh pork was found in this ranch.

Brother Jonathan's Lament for Sister Caroline.

She has gone—she has left us in passion and pride—
 Our stormy-browed sister, so long at our side!
 She has torn her own hair from your tresses
 And turned on her brother the face of a foe!
 O Caroline, Child of the sea, We can never forget that our hearts have been One—
 Our forehead both sparkled in Liberty's name, From the fountain of blood with the dagger of fame:
 You were always too ready to are at a word;
 But we said, "She is beauty—the does not mean much."
 We have sorrowed, when you uttered some bitter threat;
 But Friendship still whispered, "Forget not her!"
 Has our love all died out? Hasten ye grown cold?
 Has the curse come at last which the fathers foretold?
 Then Nature must teach us the strength of the chain.
 That her polluted children would never in vain They may fight till the barbarians are gorged with their spoil—
 Till the harvest grows black as it rots in the well—
 Till the wolves and the satanisms creep from their caves,
 And the shark tracks the pirate, the lord of the waves:
 In vain is the strife! When his fury is past, Their fortunes must flow in one channel at last—As the torrents that rush from the mountains of snow
 And mingle in peace through the valleys below.
 Our Union is river, lake, ocean, and sky: Man breaks not the metal, when God cuts the die!
 Though decked forth with sulphur, though chafed with steel—

The Gambler Echoed.
 BY SPEAKERS—W. COCHRAN.
 Sir William—An English Gentleman of large fortune, and a widower, was planning to remarry at Baden—his only child, Helen, a young lady of beauty and intelligence, but of a rather soft romantic turn of mind, being known to a great actress, was, of course, the object and expense of a grand sweep of gamblers, as well as an object of attention by men of vulgar notions. When her beauty and affability were known her. Her reputation, with the most uti-dignified pleasure, the attentions of the alier (Spanish Lasso) was, it is true, a charming young fellow, with a handsome face, a distinguished air, and a great back-stair passage to the theatre and gambling love. These races were however, overbalanced, especially in Sir William's estimation—by the fact that he had all the vices of a fast man; wore fine names as well as fine clothes, but had no family that any one knew of,
 and was in fact, however elegantly he generally succeeded in covering up his trade by playing the idler in society, and their more not less. THIS a professional gambler.

Sir William, having carefully investigated Baden's antecedents, and verified the above facts, remonstrated with Helen on her partiality for him, and begged her to save him the trouble of a collision with Gaetano Lasso, by cutting him at once.

Helen, however, firmly refused to believe in any of the stories told to permit and discredit encourage his attentions.

Sir William was one of those men of large and kind nature who cannot, under an exterior of constant concealment, which, on great occasions, weaker or less honest nature always quail. Finding remonstrance unavailing, he threw away no more words, but went into action—quick, stern, and efficient as his own nature.
 He then ferried, by dint of what he of that nature and knowing in what he

Bar shall be longer than the hair.

Good! Your choice is made. I am glad to hear you are so sensible. You will not quit you till you are one league from town, after that you are gone. I will recommend you to the authorities until to-morrow. You can easily put some distance between yourself and them that pursuit will be idle. But should my protection be necessary to you in escaping, rely upon it. Our bargain is made. I will keep it and you will March!

This story made a great noise at Baden that year. Helen would no longer doubt and Gaetano was banished from her memory with contempt and horror. Six months after she married a captain in Her Majesty's Guard, who, if he did not know much else, certainly did not know how to be frightened, and couldn't have been forced to reveal her by all the means that were ever made. Sir William was severely punished, and kept his own counsel from Helen. That, however, did not prevent his telling the story to a noble friend or two some years after.
