

Cool Work.—Not long ago a couple of Pitt River Indians went into Humbug Valley, to the camp of a band of Inskip Diggers, and proposed to them to join the Pitt River tribe in depredations upon the whites. The Inskips treated them well and delayed an answer. Meantime they went to a white man, a ranch holder in Humbug Valley, and asked him what they should do with the Pitt River Indians. He told them to kill them. They went back and immediately set to work to put the thing into execution. One of the Pitts was shot full of arrows and dispatched at once. The other ran a mile, pursued by an Inskip named Tom, both unarmed. Finally Tom overtook the fugitive, threw him down, seized him by the throat, and actually choked him to death.
