

NOME LACKEE.—This reservation, lying west of Tehama, from what we can learn, is in a flourishing condition. One of the agents informs us that there are upwards of four thousand Indians, including men, women and children, on the reservation. They are, too, generally, to all appearance, contented and peaceable. About twenty United States soldiers are stationed there under a Lieutenant. But little difficulty is experienced in managing them, provided trifling white men and whisky can be kept away from the reservation.

During the past year the Indians have done the work on a fine road from the reserve to the first settlement of the Coast Range mountains. The distance is ~~about~~ ^{about} twelve miles, and the road was opened for the purpose of hauling timber from the mountains for buildings, &c., &c.

Last year the Indians raised a crop of grain, which lasted them through the year and left a surplus of two thousand bushels when they commenced threshing the present crop. This year they make, by estimate, ten thousand bushels of wheat. Nearly all other necessaries, except meat, are also raised by the Indians, under the direction of the agent and his assistants.

When tribes are first brought together, they for a time continue hostile if they have not been friends, but in a few weeks they forget it all and work and dance together as if they had long been friends. The intercourse on the reserve is fast doing away with all the hostile feelings which have existed among different tribes—probably for centuries. The Government will find it much cheaper to feed the Indians than to fight them. The agent at the reservation for the past year, has been E. A. Stevenson, of El Dorado. He has recently been ordered to the Pitt River country, where it is contemplated to establish another reservation. He leaves in a few days to negotiate with the Pitt River Indians, and to select the location for a reservation.

He has recently been ordered to the Pitt River country, where it is contemplated to establish another reservation. He leaves in a few days to negotiate with the Pitt River Indians, and to select the location for a reservation. Upon his retiring from the Nome Lackee reservation, the employees presented him with a very fine watch and chain, as a mark of their esteem for him as a man, and of their respect for him as an officer. His name was handsomely engraved on the case, together with a brief statement of the circumstances under which it was presented. . The correspondence may be read in another column. Mr. Stevenson's administration appears to have met the approbation of those who were employed under him.
