FIGHT WITH THE HUMBOLDT INDIANS.—Three separate companies have been hunting Indians for the past twelve days, on Redwood and Upper Mad river, in the vicinity of where Ross was shot. One company under command of John Bell, numbering sixteen men, had been pursuing the Indians very close for several days, and on Thursday morning, 15th July, they made an attack on a rancho, on Grouse Creek, near where Ross was shot. They routed the rancho, and killed quite a number of Indians. It appears that the Indians had collected there to the number of about 100 with the intention of attacking Bell's party. They had divided in two parties, intending to engage Bell's party before they reached the rancheria.

Bell, however, did not go by the route the Indians expected him to, and was surprised by the Indians in ambush as he returned from the rancheria on the way to his camp. One of Bell's men was shot dead at the first fire. We have not been able to learn any further particulars than that when Bell reached his camp he found ten of his mules killed and missing, and his camp entirely broken up. He fell back to Pardee's Ranch, which he reached about daylight on 16th July. The whole party were completely worn out with fatigue, and some of them barefoot. They will remain there till they receive assistance from this place. A party will start out from here this morning.

It is thought that the Indians are collected in large numbers in that vicinity, and that they intend to stand their ground. They have quite a number of guns, and are prepared to make a desperate resistance. It is hoped that a party will go out from Eel river, and act in conjunction with the men in that section. There is a small company in the vicinity of the Buttes, but they must be well fagged out by this time, having been out now for twelve days. When last heard from, they had done good service. Persons will have to be cautious in traveling the trails for the present, though we are inclined to think that all the trouble just now will be on the Redwood and upper Mad river.—Id.

The masthead features a central sunburst emblem with rays emanating from a central point. To the left of the emblem, the word "Morning" is written in a large, ornate, blackletter-style font. To the right, the word "Bulletin" is written in a similar, large, ornate font. Below the main title, a horizontal line separates it from the date: "SAN FRANCISCO, MONDAY EVENING, JULY 26, 1858." At the very bottom, there is a line of smaller text, including "Published for the Proprietor by" and "at the Office of the Bulletin, No. 101 Market Street, San Francisco, Cal."
