

THE LAST FAMILY.—A party of citizens left Arcata on Wednesday to remove the family of J. P. Albee from his residence at Redwood into town. As all the families have now left their homes on the Bald Hills, and all between there and Mad River either murdered or driven in, the Indians have but little now to do except to kill stock, which amusement they were indulging in extensively at last accounts. Fifteen mares, the property of Mr. Whitney, who was murdered last week, were killed two days after, a few miles above Albee's.

BY THE LATE EDWARD POLLOCK. The following exquisite poem was written by the late Edward Pollock, the gifted California poet, on the 6th of January, 1857. The occasion that gave rise to the sentiment so beautifully clothed in the poetic garb, was the departure for Oregon, to some newly discovered mines, of Mr. Robert McDermott, who was the	The Counterparts... BY ONE OF THE PARTY. A quiet, uneventful life was mine, until I lost the shelter of my father's roof, and accepted the desk of a book-keeper in the wholesale clothing establishment of Shonra & Prescott, in the busy town of Astoria. One fine afternoon in October, I invited Miss Bennett, with whom I was very	At this moment the phantom stopped at the door of a fine old mansion, and mechanically I alighted and lifted out my companion. The hall door was flung open. The clasping hand of the young lady drew me within the vestibule—her musical voice called softly, at the door of a boudoir: "Allice, Richard has come!" Instantly the door flew open, and a	The Musician and Counselor. The following anecdote is told of T.
