

DIED FROM HIS WOUNDS.—Lieut. John A. Watson, of Company C, "Mountaineers," sends us the painful announcement that John Blum, one of the members of the Trinity Company wounded in the late desperate fight with the Indians at Redwood, died at Fort Humboldt on the night of the 30th ult. He was buried with military honors. We are not informed of his age or nativity. The brave boys who fought side by side with him when he received the mortal wound will cherish Blum's memory, and when next they engage the savage foe each one will remember his gallantry and consider himself his comrade's avenger.—There will be fearful mortality on the side of the red-skins next time the Trinity boys go into a fight. Mark the prediction.

Weekly Trinity Journal

A Family Newspaper, Independent in Politics, and Devoted to the Advancement of Home Interests

WEAVERVILLE, CALIFORNIA, AUGUST 15, 1863.

W. H. HERRICK

W. H. HERRICK

Where are the Copperheads?

The Hereditary