

The Indian Commission.

Dr. O. M. Wozencraft returned to this city on the night of the 10th inst., from his tour in the Indian district. He will remain in the city a few days, and then repair to an appointed spot on the Cosumnes river, in El Dorado county, and also to Lawson's ranch, on the Sacramento, for the purpose of treating with deputations of the hostile tribes in that region, who have created so much trouble, and who were the cause of the State troops being called into requisition. They have all agreed to meet the Commissioner and enter into a compact to become good and peaceable citizens, locating themselves upon the reservation which the Commissioner may allot them.

With the exception of these tribes, all the Indians south of Pitt river have agreed to the terms proposed by Dr. Wozencraft, as we are informed by that gentleman, and he has every confidence that they will adhere to the stipulations, and if not molested, give no further trouble to the whites. Dr. W. thinks that before the expiration of the year, there will be as many as 80,000 Indians upon the reservations already made, a large number having already commenced their occupation.

With a party of dragoons the Commissioner penetrated the country North of the Pitt River, accompanied by a number of friendly Indians, but the sav-

With a party of dragoons the Commissioner penetrated the country North of the Pitt River, accompanied by a number of friendly Indians, but the savages of that district fled at their approach like Antelopes. He then returned and camped on a small creek emptying into Pitt River, and subsequently with Lieut. Wright, who accompanied the expedition as a volunteer, and a small party of men, made a rapid march up the creek, and came upon a large party of Indians. A few shots were fired, and the Indians fled. Lieut. W. was hit with an arrow, but very slightly injured. Four Indians were taken prisoners and conveyed to camp, but they subsequently escaped.

The first reservation made by Dr. Wozencraft comprises about twenty-five square miles. The boundary line runs east from the Sacramento river, north of Reading's, for 25 miles, thence north to Pitt river, and is bounded on the north by that stream. The second reservation is on Feather river, and consists of a narrow strip of land about six miles broad by twenty in length, upon which there are now the representatives of twenty-two different tribes.

The third reservation is on the Sacramento river, to the north of Sutter's claim, extending back about three miles, and up the river fifteen miles. This will probably be occupied by from 2500 to 3000 Indians from the coast range, and all in the Sacramento valley, from Stone creek to Feather river, and from the mouth of the same to the mouth of the Yuba.

The fourth reservation comprises a tract of land twelve miles square, between the Bear and Yuba rivers, set aside some time since, upon which it is anticipated there will be between 6000 or 7000 Indians.

Dr. W. is quite confident that the accusation of reserving lands, rich in mineral and agricultural wealth, cannot be made with reference to these reservations, although they are susceptible of producing sufficient to meet the wants of the Indians by such cultivation they choose to bestow upon them.
