
 PROGNOSTICATIONS.—The Shasta Courier, of September 19th, has the following speculations upon the coming winter:

According to the Indian weather prognosticators, if the crop of mast be abundant, the snow and rain of the following winter will be abundant; if the crop be light, the snow and rain will be inconsiderable. This, the Indians say, is an unfailing sign. If so, then the approaching winter will be very severe, as the oaks throughout the hills are literally groaning beneath the weight of a superabundant crop of acorns. It is an interesting fact in this connection, that since the Americans have been in this State, the indication has always preceded a hard winter.
