

THE INDIANS ON THE KLAMATH.—A correspondent of the Marysville Herald, writing from Orleans Bar, Aug. 30th says:

The Indians throughout this region of country are at present quiet and peaceably disposed towards the pale faces, but the bitterest feuds exist among themselves. But few days ago a "nowina," or old man of the tribe, was shot dead by the bullet of a yager in the hands of another. The hills about the wigwam of the deceased have ever since resounded to the wailings and shouts of the women and men mourners. On yesterday, a squaw, bearing a pair of papooses, passed the hotel, crying bitterly, and the loss of the venerable head of the tribe appears to have created the greatest consternation. Just above the mouth of Klamath river there is another reservation, on which at the present time there are two thousand Indians, and at a point thirty miles or thereabouts up the river, there are sixteen hundred more. All of these are engaged in useful occupations, and most of them contented as well as industrious. At various other places along this stream may be seen quite large rancherias of friendly Indians. During the past week they have been indulging in a variety of amusements peculiar to their race.
