

NOME CULT INDIAN FARM.—A correspondent writing from Round Valley, to the Santa Rosa Democrat says:

The Nome Cult Indian farm under the management of S. P. Storms, is in a flourishing condition—extensive and good crops were raised this season. All kinds of vegetables are raised in the greatest abundance. Improvements, considering the facilities at hand have been made to a great extent. Several enlightened families are settled here, which has a tendency to soften and civilize what would otherwise be somewhat rough and heathenish. The Indians are generally contented, are made useful in producing the ware with to maintain them. A large number of stock has been brought to this and adjoining valleys, as they are Edens in soil and production, in comparison with the parched up Sacramento and other valleys.
