

Indian Difficulty in Hoopa Valley.

Our readers will recollect that we noticed, week before last, the killing of an Indian by a drunken citizen and a soldier in Hoopa Valley.

From what we can learn, the act was a most dastardly and outrageous one, but owing to the fact that there were no competent witnesses to be introduced against them, the Justice, before whom they were taken, discharged them. This caused a great excitement among the Indians in the Valley, who cannot appreciate such justice. The Indian killed, we learn, was the son of the old chief who was taken below some two years since. Various reports have reached us in reference to the movements and present attitude of the Indians up there, growing out of the murder of this young Indian, but the following, handed us by a friend, is perhaps as near a true statement of the case as can be had. The information comes direct:

The following are as nearly the facts, respecting the Indian difficulty in Hoopa Valley, as I can gather them from persons who have been there:

A squaw difficulty resulted in the killing of a young Indian. The Indians say they saw a citizen and a soldier kill him. They had their trial before Justice Stone, and were acquitted for want of any evidence from white men against them.

The Indians became much excited. — Many of them left the Valley, as was supposed, to watch the trails for the citizen. Some few of the Indians, fearing a collision, packed up and started to the Reservation, that they might not be implicated.

This was represented as the state of thing when my informants left that vicinity. The report now in circulation, that a general collision is expected, should be received with caution. The facts in the case do not justify its expectation.

It has been fashionable to compare unfavorably the works of this country with those of Europe. In such an extent has this been carried that it is not infrequently said that we have to look to Europe for the continent for most of our supplies. We are continually told by travelers of the great extent, beauty and admirability of the continental works, and of the enormous strength of the English structure. Now, it is perfectly true that Europe has boasted of magnificent bridges, aqueducts, viaducts, in the world for beauty and excellence of workmanship and design, but it is equally true that America can point to works of utility that, in the magnificence of their proportions, are not exceeded anywhere.	Walker in Central America.
