

MASSACRE OF INDIANS.—The Plumas Argus, of Oct. 1st, says that the account published last week of a terrible massacre of one band of Indians by another on Pitt river, was an error. The Indians killed were a band of the Pitt River tribe, who were attacked by a company of whites, known as the Pitt River company, an organization acting without authority of any kind. The Argus says:

Our informant, Mr. Henry Landt, acting as guide to Gen. Kibbie, was on the ground soon after the foul murder was committed, and estimates the number killed at ninety, ten of whom were warriors, the balance women and children. He depicts the scene as most horrible; bodies mutilated and half-burned were strewn over the ground; fifty of the victims laying in sight from one stand point. Gen. Kibbie, as we gather from Mr. Landt's report, on reaching the scene of action, in the course he pursued, made but little improvement on the acts of the blood-thirsty wretches who preceded him. Having captured two infants, he ordered them taken out in view of the Indians, and, through promises of protection and kind usage, and the anxiety to procure their children, persuaded two warriors to come into his camp; fair promises were made these men, and through them an invitation was extended to the tribe to meet him the next day for a "big talk," and a feast. On the next day the same men, accompanied by one of the chiefs of the tribe, visited the camp of the Americans, and failing to come to any terms, were detained when they attempted to leave. Contrary to express stipulation, and when, on discovering the bad faith of the whites, they attempted to make their escape, two of them were shot down, the chief being re-taken. Mr. L. further informs us that the next day the re-captured chief very readily came to terms.
