

KILLED BY INDIANS.—A tribe of Indians in the neighborhood of Round Valley, distant some twelve miles from Nome Cult Reservation, some days since killed two white men. It seems, says the Tehama Advocate, that the Indians had been on the watch, to if possible, catch the men separate, which they succeeded in doing, one having gone after horses. The one left at the house was found a horribly mutilated corpse; the other was found dead near a spring a short distance from the house, with his body pierced through with ten or twelve arrows. S. P. Storms, the Indian agent, did not learn the murdered men's names nor any particulars, save that they were hunters. Mr. S. intends to go out with a small force, inquire into the matter and thrust the savages into submission, and if possible, collect them together and take them under his own charge at Nome Cult.
