

FIGHT WITH THE INDIANS.—We are informed by Mr. Poilsticker, who was one of the participants in the battle, that about ten days since a desperate encounter took place between a party of ten Americans led on by "Uncle Red," and a large number of Indians, near the U. S. Reservation in Clinton Valley, Mendocino county.

The Indians have been very troublesome of late, having killed a great many cattle in the neighborhood and having otherwise rendered their presence dangerous and obnoxious to the inhabitants thereabouts.

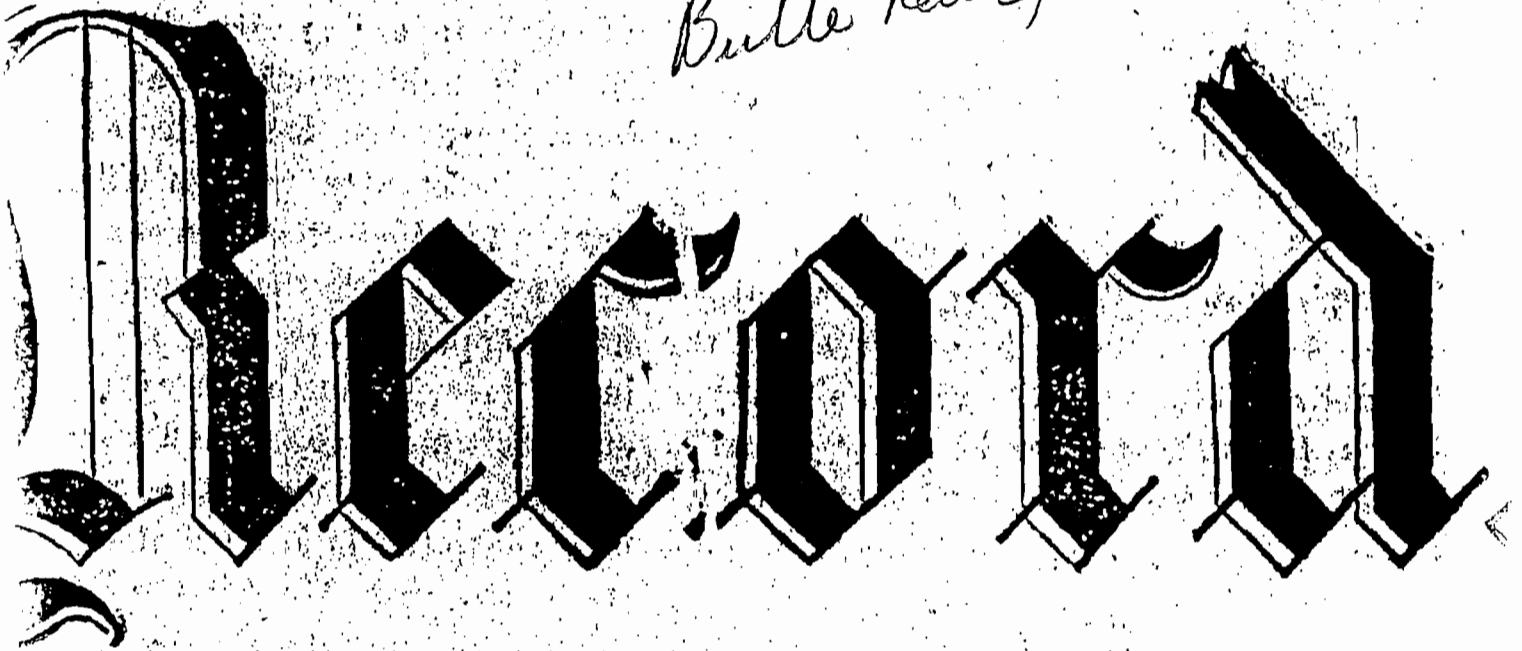

The object of the party was not to punish the Indians in the manner they did, but if possible to bring them to the Reservation. The rascals were not disposed to go however, but showed their disinclination so to do, by shooting a volley of arrows into the little band. A terrible fight ensued, in which most of the white men were wounded and fifty-five of the Indians slain, and about as many more of their squaws and children were taken captive to the Reservation.

"Uncle Red," the gallant old chieftain who led this fearless little band of heroes, was one of Fremont's men, but evidently has no very high opinion of that gentleman's abilities and qualifications for the Presidency, for, as he expresses himself, he "wouldn't vote for him to save his life."

This is rather a large sized straw in the political breeze, and is a pretty good sample of the opinions of those men with whom Col. Fremont has been associated.

Mr. Poilsticker says that neither Fillmore or Fremont are considered in the ring in Mendocino county, but that she will cast almost her entire vote for "Buck and Breck." This is true of Mendocino, and as she goes, so goes the State.
