

AN INDIAN WARRIOR AND SAGAMORE.—Under this head the S. F. Herald of the 16th inst. has a truly pathetic article, which aptly illustrates the fable of the ass in the lion's skin, as any we have seen. We suppose the two "diggers" referred to in the article are the same that went down with Capt. Snyder some two weeks since, as one of them is styled "the wise and valiant Oplee-Gow-Mow-c-Mah, or the Great House Chief of the Hoopa Valley tribe." The Herald adds: the "old man is as erect and his eye as bright as when in the full vigor of life he took the war path, and decorated his belt with the scalps of his enemies." He is lionized as the chief of five hundred warriors, well armed with rifles. "He dictates to several thousand of his race, and his word is law."—Strange to say, however, Capt. Snyder's name is not mentioned in the article at all, but the Indians are said to have been taken down by Major Heintzleman, who went down some two months since. We are sorry that the length of the article precludes the possibility of our publishing it this week, but the next issue will give it in full, as we wish our readers in Hoopa and on Klamath to see how easy it is to make a mountain of a mole hill.
