

INDIANS.—A Mr. Alexander, who is encamped beyond Antelope creek for the purpose of hunting, informs us that he has been chased away from his camp by the Indians, who are armed with rifles. He learns from a Squaw (whom he keeps at his camp for protection,) that they intend to murder, steal and rob every thing and every body in the valley this winter. We advise the people to keep a look out for Red-Skins, and not trust too far to white Indians. We think the white one rather the worst of the two on account of the advantages he holds over his red brethren.
