

ANTICIPATED DELUGE IN 1856-7.—There seems to be a general opinion prevailing among the weather sages that the ensuing rainy season is to be a severe one—amounting, in fact, almost to a second Deucalion flood. We are told that the Indians of Klamath and Trinity—who may be considered ‘oldest inhabitants’—anticipate an unusually hard winter, and are making preparations accordingly. We are unable to conjecture what they found their predictions upon, unless it be the fact that the average quantity of rain did not fall during the last season—the streams in consequence were much lower, and that the balance due must be added to that of the coming winter. Such seems to be the reasoning of men of science, who are perhaps no better skilled in soothsaying in regard to the weather than the natives.—Humboldt Times.
