

~~An Arrival From Honey Lake.~~

Our friend, Charles C. Walden, who has been residing in Honey Lake Valley during the summer arrived here day before yesterday, having left the Lake on the 11th inst. He thinks the Indian difficulties about an end, the whites having succeeded in driving them from the valley. The Washoes, with whom the difficulty originated have withdrawn from that portion of the country, and gone down toward the Truckee. The Pitt River Indians, instead of being allied to the Pitutahs and Washoes for the purpose of murdering white people, are deadly enemies to both of those tribes. He says there was an error in the communication of Isaac Roop to the Shasta Republican in relation to the Indian war in that valley, the citizens did not have to retreat into the fort, but stood their ground, and repulsed the enemy. The stock that was stolen by the Indians was all brought back. Mr. Walden represented himself to them as the chief of the whites over here; and that he would come over and get an army and kill them all unless they did so.

~~Pitt River Correspondence.~~

We give the following letter a place in our columns (although it is too personal) for the reason that a large community are interested in the subject matter, and knowing Mr. Lockhart personally, we have always regarded him as responsible. Of the matter in question, however, we have no knowledge whatever:—

Pitt River Ferry, Nov. 8, 1857.
