

TAR AND FEATHERS.— December 14th three loafers at Coos Bay abducted a little Indian girl about eleven years old, first horribly beating her father and mother who endeavored to protect her from the ruffians. The people upon learning the facts, formed a Court with Judge Lynch upon the bench and ordered the arrest of the offenders. One of them, Massey, made his escape in good time, but the others—Davis and Bill Suse—were tried and sentenced to "receive a coat of tar and feathers, have one side of their heads shaved and to leave Coos County instanter and never return." The sentence was carried out to the letter and the last seen of Davis and Suse they were traveling down the coast.

YANKEE ACQUISITIVENESS DEMONSTRATED.—Charles Lever, the Irish novelist, never penned anything better than the Yankee Quackdoctor's advice to the English tourists: "Here's how it is," said he, "Our folk ain't your folk because they speak the same language. In your country you like to eat it, answer for you, and the individual man merrily in this he belongs to. Not so here. We don't care a red cent about your rank but we want to know about yourself and around the other, where once the flame of seeming love was burning, blighted hope and fond hearts now fall in a night broken, and we weigh their loss with our petty gains—the curse we have taken—there is already drained to the verge.

Flirtation always has an after-piece, and the clothing performance often leaves bitter feelings. Flirtation, if it be all flirtation on one side, and all faith and love on the other, is like the game of some of our Indian traders, who give to simple natives glass beads and feathers in exchange for gold and diamonds, or worthless trinkets in return for articles of value.

For a man to accept from a woman her heart's best love in return for such little attentions as he can spare from the rigors of life, or seek to win her heart just for the conquest, and then to refuse the obligation which a pure heart has laid upon the shrine of his ambition, is a cruel deed, he is deserving a long breath, like a summing up the path of a discourse, to see all manner of things in Yankee countenance, to enter hearts worthy of a true heart's love, simply for the cruel pleasure of seeing them drop under the disappointment, is a flirtation which will sooner or later visit the first with a cruel hospital, though offered in a way that never to you—will you'll be long in it, your affection must be to a or the worth and genuine loyalty of character.
