The main body of the Indians are encamped at and about Table Rock. Many mules, horses, and stock of all descriptions have been killed about Jacksonville and Willow Springs.

Mr. Wilson got 11 revolvers, navy size, and ammunition, and left this morning at 4 o'clock; he says that he has two mules at every station on the road for changes, and will reach home in five hours.

He met the company that left here yesterday evening, on the other side of the Klamath; they will not stop until they reach the scene of action.

The company consists of about 15 soldiers from Fort Jones and twenty or thirty volunteers from this place and Greenhorn, with a good supply of muskets, ammunition, &c.

Another large company of volunteers will leave this place to-day.

Esquire Steel has an order to hire all the horses and mules he can procure, for which will be paid $4 per day by Uncle Sam.

The Herald concludes its article as follows:

It behooves every person to be on their guard throughout the valley. We do not know what moment they will commence here. No person should travel alone without being well armed. We learn from Messrs. Morton and Garland, who arrived here from Shasta Butte this morning at half past two o'clock, that last night they saw the signal fires of the Indians high up on the side of the Butte, which is no doubt their signals to the Pitt River's and Modocks, to join them and commence in this valley.
