Indian Affairs in the North.

The Yreka Mountain Herald of the 3d inst. says:

We are glad to say that the difficulties between the whites and Indians in this valley has been amicably settled; consequently, there is no danger to be apprehended in traveling to and from, or through this valley.

The stipulations of the treaty, as we understand from Esquire Steele, one of the commissioners appointed for the purpose of making a treaty with the Indians, are as follows:

The Indians are to give up all their fire-arms and ammunition; return the stock stolen from Mr. Price's farm, and pay for the male killed at the above place. They are to have the privilege of remaining in this, or of removing to Scott Valley, during the excitement in the Rogue River country; and when those of the tribe who are fighting against the whites in Rogue River valley shall return, they are to be given up to the whites, who shall treat them as the merits of the case may seem to deserve. When the Indians shall have complied with the above stipulations, the horses taken from them during the skirmish on Shasta river are to be returned, or an equivalent for the same.

This treaty we consider to be as fair on either side as could be expected; and it was adopted almost unanimously by our citizens; thus ending a disturbance which, if left alone a few weeks longer, might have been the cause of many of our most intimate friends and valuable citizens losing their lives, besides a vast destruction of property, and a great inconvenience to our business and travelling community. It has already been the cause of a feeling of enmity between many of our friends and citizens. This we are sorry to see. Every person should have a right to his own opinions, and should be allowed the privilege of free discussion of the same. It certainly speaks anything but favorably for the good order and friendly feelings which should exist among our citizens, when we cannot get up a meeting to make arrangements or adopt measures that are for the interest of all, the whole community, without such strong indications of mobism, and such severe personalities being passed between them. If we view a subject in a different light from that of our friend, we certainly should enjoy the privilege of doing so, and without causing us to become enemies to each other. We hope we shall have no more such disturbances in our city as we have had concerning the Indians in this valley.

A correspondent of the Herald, writing from Jacksonville, under date of the 29th ult., says:

Since I last wrote to you, we have had two more of our citizens killed, and one wounded, by the Indians near Frizell's Ferry, on Rogue River. The following are the particulars:

Capt. E. A. Owens has been assigned the duty of keeping the road open between here and the canyon. On the 27th ult., he left here on his second trip out. When he reached Long's Ferry, he left a small detachment of his company for the purpose of looking for some lost horses; and from what I learn of the matter, the detachment divided into two parties; one party consisted of Lieut. Thos. Frizell, James Mungo, a half-breed, formerly of Scott's Bar, and a California Indian, who were fired upon by some Indians concealed in the bushes, and the two first named persons were shot dead, and the California Indian wounded. The other party, not far from where the murders were committed, came in sight of four Indians, driving off some 40 head of cattle, belonging to persons living near the Ferry. They pursued and wounded one of them, and recovered the cattle.

Col. B. R. Alden, and some of the others wounded in the last battle, reached town yesterday. The Colonel is doing well, and in fine spirits, and I am happy to learn that his wound is not considered dangerous. Gen. Lane and the other wounded soldiers are also doing well.

Major Alvord and suit arrived here to-day, for the purpose of surveying a military road between Stuart's creek and Myrtle creek. Capt. Lindey Applegate arrived also to-day from the Umpqua, with 35 men, and a supply of ammunition, accompanied by Mr. Snelling.
