UNION, CALIFORNIA, SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 10, 1855.

From the Seat of War.

Capt. Judah, in company with Mr. G. W. Taggart, arrived in town on Tuesday—in advance of his Company—from the Klamath River. He returned in pursuance of orders from Col. Buchanan. Capt. Judah has, by the force of moral suasion, prevented a wholesale massacre of the friendly Indians along the river, and in consequence hostilities are confined to the Red Cap and other ranches, the warriors numbering not exceeding fifty.

Mr. Roseborough, the Indian Agent, from Fort Jones, arrived on the Klamath on the 4th instant, and recommended the organization of four companies of volunteers, for the purpose of hunting out the hostile Indians. In pursuance of the recommendation, Captains Flowers and Luffkin proceeded to organize, trusting that the State would reimburse them for the services of their companies.

We learn that Capt. Young, with a party of citizens, guided by two Indians, was in close pursuit of the hostiles on Monday, and it was believed he would catch them.

Mr. Lamb, who was wounded in the first difficulty, died at Preston & Kerbey's store on Saturday, the 3d inst.
