

THE HUMBOLDT TIMES.

UNION, CALIFORNIA, SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 3, 1855.

Letter from the Seat of War.

We copy from the Oregonian of the 27th inst. the following editorial remarks in relation to the Indian disturbances in Oregon, as our time will not allow us to indulge in remarks of our own.

PORTLAND, SATURDAY MORNING, Oct. 27, 1855.

Since our last several companies have left this city on their way to the Indian country. They have been considerably delayed here in order to get their horses shod, and to obtain supplies necessary to sustain them during their march. Benton county company, under command of Capt. Munson, and the Linn county company, under command of Capt. Layton, left yesterday. There is now but one company, viz: that from the French Prairie, to come in. When that arrives it will complete the force called for by the Governor's proclamation, and will number about one thousand men. This whole force has been well equipped and armed. They go out with the full determination to suppress the Indian rebellion.

the force called for by the Governor's proclamation, and will number about one thousand men. The whole force has been well mounted and armed. They go out with the full determination to bring an everlasting peace with the Indians whenever they may be found. Maj. Haines, of the United States Army, is already in the field with over three hundred soldiers. It is supposed these forces will be adequate to the task before them. It is well understood there will be some severe fighting, and the volunteers have gone up with that understanding. They are composed of men who can endure hardships and toil without murmuring, and who will leave their mark wherever they go. Their officers are men who have seen service, and who are well acquainted with the Indian character and mode of warfare, and besides they go out light and conquer, which they will do or never return. It is presumed the whole force designed for the work will be in the field in about ten days from this time.
