

tains, and looked as we fancy Sir William Wallace, and his bold and gallant compatriots must have looked in days of yore. They were highly delighted with their visit to and reception by Mr. Pierce, and speak in glowing terms of him. They are about to return to old Scotland."

DEATH OF THE INDIAN CHIEF HOW-HONY.—The Shasta "Courier" details the killing of this desperado, who was captured some days since by Sheriff Nunnally, and an account of which we detailed at the time. It appears that he tried to escape from the Sheriff, who finding that he gained on him in running, fired and shot him through the head. The "Courier" gives the following account of him: "For five or six years he has been at the head of a company of Indian banditti, numbering some six men, and levied contributions upon all who excited his hostility—Indians as well as whites. He confessed to having killed fifteen white men in this country—ten of them near the Coast Range, between Arbuckle and Red Bank Creek. He also assisted in killing Lieut. Russell. He said that he once tied a white man to a tree, in the vicinity of Arbuckle, and shot arrows into him until he died. He killed another one with an arrow on South Cottonwood, as he was trying to make his escape. He had a pistol with Brown's name upon it, which he took after he had killed him. He said that he was born immediately in the forks of the North and Middle tributaries of the Cottonwood, and that he was 28 years of age. He boasted that he had never been whipped by a white man, and told Sheriff Nunnally that he was the first man that had ever conquered him. The Indians will be as much rejoiced to hear of his death as the whites themselves.—[S. F. Herald.

INFORMATION WANTED.—Information is wanted by an afflicted mother, of a son, a young man, named Thomas Laurie, of Cambridge. He formerly resided in St. Louis; and in April 1852, in company with Edward Heep, sailed for California from New York, by way of Panama. Since then no intelligence has been had of him. His mother, who is aged, resides in Concord Avenue, Old Cambridge. Any communications in relation to the matter, sent to her address, or this office, will be gratefully received.
