THE INDIAN OUTBREAK.—The Shasta Courier gives further intelligence respecting the Indian disturbances on the Northern frontier, to that culled from the Yreka Union, and published in this paper a few days ago. The letter is written by Rev. R. B. Stratton:

YREKA, July 30th, 1855.

MESSRS. EDITORS: Though a stranger, I take the liberty of saying to you that the Indian difficulties announced in the "Extra" Union of Saturday, are growing more serious every moment. I write you, thinking I will then be more certain to apprise some friends, whom I expect to be at Shasta in a few days, en route for this place.

To-day two Indians were hung here; they were caught last evening near Yreka, with arms and ammunition, and identified as being connected with the hostile tribe. One of them was an elderly man, obviously of a stern experience, as he was thoroughly scarred. Four more are to be hung this evening on Humbug. No further reports from Klamath, (the place where the first depredations were made,) except that Indians are still prowling about in that region.

Posters have been sent to all parts of Scott and Shasta valleys, that isolated families may gather to some defensible position. The excitement is intense, and likely to continue. The younger of the two Indians hung to-day, asserted just before he swung, that the "Rogue River Indians" and many others, had combined to pursue a war of extermination upon the whites; and that they had vowed never to enter into a treaty again. Whatever credit may be given to his words, they will not tend to any abatement of the present excitement. He further states that they had determined the utter destruction of this town.

Stealing squaws, and selling the Indians rum and arms, will prove dear traffic to the innocent (?) whites. Yours, &c., R. B. STRATTON.

MORE INDIANS.—The Shasta Courier learns that a party of Indians attacked several white men one day last week, near Castle Rock, and wounded one of them very seriously, by shooting an arrow through both of his cheeks. The others escaped unharmed.
