

town, he spoke of it in the presence of Butler, who immediately replied in favor of the Spaniard. A few words passed between them, when Butler drew a revolver and struck at Moffatt. The blow was warded off, and thus it was supposed the matter would rest; but Butler watched his chance, and shot Moffatt in the left breast, so that he died of his wounds the next morning. Butler escaped.—Ibid.

THREE WHITE MEN MURDERED BY INDIANS.—An extra from the office of the Yreka Union, details the killing of three men and wounding of two others, by the Indians, near the summit of the Siskiyou Mountain, on the 24th Sept. One of the men was named Samuel Warner; another Field; and the third unknown. The Indians numbered twelve, and were all well armed.

LAMENTABLE OCCURRENCE.—A man named Wilmot was accidentally killed by his mining partner on Monday last, near Rough and Ready, under the following circumstances: It appears that they had been disturbed for several nights by hogs, which came about their cabin, wakening and otherwise annoying them. About two o'clock on Monday morning, Wilmot heard a noise without, and stepped out of doors to discover the occasion. His partner was waked a few moments after by the same noise, and not knowing that Wilmot had left the cabin, he raised the window and fired. The ball entered W. in the vicinity of the heart, and he immediately expired.—Nevada Democrat
